

Canada's Paradise Hunter to film in Jamaica

Local reports are that Paradise Hunter, a new Canadian television show, is scheduled to make a stop in Jamaica this month for filming between October 23 to 30.

This comes according to an interview down with Dennis Kambeitz, director of the reality leisure series. "We do our best to experience all that the destination has to offer. From regional activities, to cultural events, to simply getting to know the locals. We've got one week to try to get to know the soul of Jamaica". Filming will be done on the north coast, from Ocho Rios to Negril. The production team plans to capture authentic Jamaican scenes including roadside vendors, a trip to Dunn's River Falls and Mystic Mountain in St Ann, and snorkeling and cliff-diving in Negril. Kambeitz continued by saying "from haggling with the local fishmonger on the beach to zipping through a lush green forest on a canopy tour, you will get the inside scoop on what life is like in different regions within each country. We also explore the local real estate market to help you compare prices from country to country, helping you plan your escape to paradise."
